The City of Dearborn is known for its automotive innovation as the home of the Ford Motor Company. This innovation was bolstered by the many industries which followed the auto giant to the city to manufacture parts. What has resulted from the years of factory use has been a legacy of pollution and grey infrastructure – buildings, parking lots, and contaminated soil. As the city continues to grow and attract new business, efforts to mitigate old pollution and contain new environmental contaminants are needed. One such solution is the incorporation of an industrial green belt.
